You can download the game from. The present invention relates to electronic design automation and design tools for integrated circuits, and in particular, to cell-based design tools for integrated circuits. With increasing microelectronic device complexity and reduction of feature sizes, a major problem facing the industry is a time-to-market bottleneck, due to the general difficulty of the device design cycle. Cell-based designs make use of high-level design or description languages, e.g., VHDL (VHSIC Hardware Description Language), Verilog, etc. Using such high-level design description languages, a designer, is able to define or describe one or more cells within an integrated circuit, for example, a processor, memory, etc. After defining or describing the cells within the integrated circuit, an engineer is able to manually synthesize the high-level design description language source code to create a "netlist" file. The netlist file consists of a list of cells which are in an "enablement state" and the nets that connect such cells. As used herein, the term "net" refers to a communications path connecting a first cell to a second cell. After creating the netlist file, a device compiler can perform several types of conversion to create an "output file" for the physical design. First, the device compiler can perform a standard cell-based synthesis to convert the netlist into a physical circuit representation. Second, the device compiler can generate a cell-based layout of the integrated circuit. Third, the device compiler can generate a list of polygons for the integrated circuit. These polygons are used for contact and routing, etc. Fourth, the device compiler can perform a "floor planning" operation to place the cells into a field and column region of the integrated circuit. The most significant bottleneck for developing a device, such as an integrated circuit or chip, is the design time, i.e., the time required to develop a functional design. In order to reduce the design time,
