I have written a number of classes. I want to use a method and a property from one of them in the other classes. For example in the Form1 class I have a property public string example { get; set; } And then in the Form2 class I want to use that property. How do I do this? A: Sure, you do it by referencing the Form1 class: static void Main(string[] args) { Form1 f1 = new Form1(); f1.example = "example"; Form2 f2 = new Form2(); f2.ExampleMethod(f1.example); Console.ReadLine(); } Or you can make your Form1 class implement an interface and then have the other classes reference the interface instead: public class Form1 : Form2, IMyInterface { public string example; public string ExampleMethod(string input) { // Do stuff. return input; } } That can go in the interface and the implementation in the non-interface class: public interface IMyInterface { public
