1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of manufacturing a semiconductor device having a structure where a film having a conductivity, an electrical insulating property, or the like is disposed on the surface of an insulating substrate, and a semiconductor device manufactured by the manufacturing method. More specifically, the invention relates to a method of manufacturing a semiconductor device having a structure where a crystalline silicon film is disposed on the surface of an insulating substrate, and a semiconductor device manufactured by the manufacturing method. The invention also relates to a method of manufacturing a semiconductor device having a structure where a thin film of, for example, an amorphous silicon film is disposed on the surface of an insulating substrate, and a semiconductor device manufactured by the manufacturing method. 2. Related Background Art The majority of conventional semiconductor integrated circuits are formed on a semiconductor substrate such as a silicon substrate by using a thin film forming technique such as, for example, a vapor phase growth method and a sputtering method. As the majority of semiconductor integrated circuits are becoming more highly integrated, however, it has become difficult to increase the thickness of the semiconductor substrate. Hence, thin film transistors, for example, are used as a switching element in an active matrix substrate for liquid crystal displays. In recent years, from a viewpoint of ensuring high picture quality, improvements in liquid crystal displays have been made in terms of a substrate property, an optical property, and a method of manufacturing the liquid crystal displays, and moreover the substrates are becoming progressively thin. The active matrix liquid crystal displays available in recent years are mostly driven by a simple matrix system. In this system, for example, a liquid crystal element is provided in each of pixels defined in a matrix fashion, and a TFT is provided in each of the pixels. In the case of forming a TFT by using a conventional amorphous silicon film, it is possible to obtain a high field-effect mobility; however, since the maximum temperature for heat treatment is limited to about 300° C., polycrystalline silicon TFTs cannot be formed. Hence, in order to form a polycrystalline silicon TFT, it is necessary to employ a laser annealing method where a laser beam is radiated to a substrate to selectively irradiate a part thereof in an instant. In this case, since the temperature of the substrate rises to 500° C. or more by the radiation of the laser beam, the
