“When we look at football today, it’s very comparable to what we saw in the past 10-15 years,” said Michael Sepso, Technical Director at EA Sports. “Players are bigger, faster, stronger. The data that FIFA uses is measured from the past and from real-life players, so the virtual experience is very accurate. But when the game starts to be more dynamic, we need to get a better understanding of the game.” Not only does HyperMotion Technology give the player a “better experience in the moment,” but it also impacts online play. It’s also used in the ability to display players’ skill ratings on the pitch. Players with higher skill ratings will display on the pitch in a heavier skin color or a customized badge. “FIFA is pretty much defining the standard,” Sepso said. In addition to the new features, FIFA 22 has more depth and nuance to the cards players build up throughout the game. Players will also have more options at their disposal to purchase cards, including the ability to add cards to teams at any point in a match. Earlier this year, players got their first hands-on with FIFA 22 and received a deep-dive into each of the game’s eight World Cup regions: Africa, Americas, Europe, Oceania, Asia, and the Global (North and South) Cup. Players also got a chance to check out the new Australian National Team, which is coached by Ange Postecoglou. FIFA 22 will release on August 9 for Xbox One, Xbox 360, PlayStation 4, PlayStation 3, and PC. The present invention relates to a data transmission cable, and more particularly to a data transmission cable which will not be influenced by the electromagnetic wave at any time. One conductor is a phase signal conductor, the other conductor a shield conductor for suppressing a potential generated by human body. A specific resistance of the shield conductor is much smaller than that of the phase signal conductor. When the electrical power or data signals are transmitted through the telephone line, the electromagnetic wave generated by the electrical power or data signals is also transmitted through the telephone line. The electrical power or data signals have a frequency in the range of 300 Hz to 300 kHz and
