4GW simulation game Player controlled head of state character Multiplayer options: solo, team, online Troop management Country map: 2D World, 3D to be chosen by players Classified locations (embassies, hospitals…) Diplomacy Cyberwarfare Naval, air and land strategy Military strategy Social engineering Evolution of different countries Numerous leaders in their labs In-game events & incidents Realistic adversaries Public opinion Each leader has its own political vision Unlike the popular endless game series, Action Heroes, Action Heroes 4th Generation Warfare is a simulation game. It is not an action-adventure game where the player controls the actions of a character in real time. Contrary to most simulation games, it is a game of strategy based on ancient systems of political science. The game has a real-time and turn-based mode. In real-time, time passes normally: each turn corresponds to one day. At the end of the turn, the AI adversary can perform an action. At the beginning of the next turn, the player can choose an action to perform and perform it as soon as the time for that action elapses. In turn-based mode, all actions are available immediately, so the player has an infinite time to carry out each action. More information can be found on this website: There are two game modes: • Career: the game begins with a scenario set up by the player and the AI, with the player's character the only controlled one. The player must grow their group of companions and increase their influence in the country, first gaining the trust of the people and then developing their administration. The game ends when their character dies. • Government: the player can select a dozen or more characters from a starting group of twenty-five, for a total of fifty-four playable characters. The player first selects their greatest allies: a head of state and his closest advisers. Then the player must make their decisions, against a backdrop of strategic, political, military, social, economic issues. To play it, the player must start by writing their country's political programme for a year. Their country will then be ready for the start of the game. The player can install the desired policies:

scientific and technological development, economy development, foreign policy, defence, international relations

What's new:

King Arthur II: Dead Legions is an Action role-playing game for Microsoft Windows platforms. It was developed and published by Big Blue Interactive. It takes place in the same setting as Knights of the Old Republic and Knights of the Old Republic II: The Sith Lords, which both take place in the same fictional universe, which in turn takes place after Star Wars: Knights of the Old Republic. Like both games, it is set in the 9th century, in a world in which humans have established a civilization that encompasses dozens of planets, called Kotoros, with their own political and economic systems. Eventually, it is discovered that this civilization has been sponsoring and training an army of humanoid droids who have infiltrated Kotoros' space. Development for King Arthur II: Dead Legions began in early 2006. The developers had been trying for years to find a publisher for the game, but it was not until 2005 when Big Blue Interactive decided to release their creation for the PC. A demo was released in early 2006 to give game testers a chance to experience the game. In March 2006, the game was released on Microsoft's Games for Windows Live, and the first public demo was available to play. Like other games in the series, Dead Legions was also released on the Xbox 360. The game's plot is set nearly 700 years in the past, during the Arthurian era. The world is divided into two regions: the "Free Realm" and the

"Jedek Kingdom", an empire in which the Jedek people enslave the rest of their species. Settlements throughout the lands of free humanity are besieged by the Kothrak Empire, an imperialist federation that has destroyed many settlements in previous years. The populace of the Free Realm soon realize that their only hope to survive is to unite to stand against the Jedek and Kothrak Empires, forming a new civilization to save their homes. Gameplay King Arthur II: Dead Legions is an Action role-playing game, similar to the Knights of the Old Republic series. It is played in an isometric third-person perspective over a series of rooms set in a three-dimensional environment. The game is mostly set on open spaces, where the player character and the enemy forces will encounter each other, and the story is being told by the game's written dialogue. The role-playing game combines a variety of combat systems into the game, including point-and-shoot melee combat, ranged attacks, and calls for support against enemies. There are three different

U.S. Pat. No. 6,283,347 to Curran et al. discloses one method of maintaining the static seal, between the rotating and stationary components. In Curran et al., a seal is mounted on a rotating rotating compressor seal support ring. As the rotating seal support ring rotates, the seal travels on the periphery of the ring, and the seal is maintained in a sealing relationship with the stationary casing. Additionally, the Curran et al.

arrangement maintains the face of the rotating seal stationary, and thus, the seal presses against the stationary casing. The embodiment of Curran et al. is particularly configured for a turbine engine. The turbine section of a gas turbine engine is sealed at the turbine end, where the turbine rotor and stationary turbine casing are
