I am not normally a fan of weddings, and although I have been to a few, I have always ended up feeling bad for these couples and their mothers and fathers, who have to attend. I suppose I just could not understand what they were

Christopher Paolini In 2005, E.J. Suinn made his living out of the internet by selling books on it. He received new mail almost every day and soon they started piling up around his desk. E.J. Suinn was a college student then, and he got to hear so many people tell their stories of being turned away. E.J. Suinn

decided he didn't want to do that, and that he wanted to get rich doing it. "I figured I could just open up a publicist/book-selling business on the internet, and, if it all went well, everything would be fine," Suinn says. But he didn't see the internet going away. He thought that maybe he could make enough money to finish up his college education. How this college student ended up selling his books on the internet is a story he's proud of, because it's one of the best examples of reaching for the brass ring that inevitably falls into your lap. He had sold about 10,000 books at that point, thanks to a marketing team he had begun to hire with his first publisher. Now, he was making a name for himself in the industry. "Education reform is a huge, huge issue," says Paolini, who is now 30 years old. "People were interested in the political part of it, but I always saw it as more of a business issue. I guess I really just latched on to it because I really liked the idea of making money by
