The Musical Score for Interplanetary. A dramatic, epic score for these uncertain times. Battle the distant threat of alien species and travel the stars in search of new worlds. As the human race continues its push to expand beyond the bounds of the Solar System, a new threat appears: the race of Simulants. A hostile alien species, the Simulants are bent on destroying humanity's technological supremacy. Only through a bold alliance with two new worlds - one Centauri-controlled, the other Sol-Sector - can humanity make its next move. The stakes couldn't be higher and the conflict stirs like a dying fire. Through sound and vision, Interplanetary will take you to the front lines of this battle of worlds and lead you into the future of human space. Fly... shoot... Flee! The year is 2022. Around the world, the military is dealing with "the aliens problem" and with dwindling funds, they've chosen to sell their best assets off to private security contractors. You've just joined Lucas Brazier and his crew on their last mission. Their target, the firebird, has been spotted by the Air Force once again, and they need to stop it at all costs. But their launch codes are incorrect, so there's only one solution; employ the private industry. After several months of training and missions in simulators, you're ready for your first real assignment, tracking and destroying the mythical firebird. It's not just an ordinary UFO, it's the fastest UFO in the world and can make its target disappear in a matter of seconds. The world is at stake. Fight, survive and fly faster than ever! The game is free and no data or ads are stored on the user's device. We do not show ads, nor ask the user for any permissions or information. How the game plays? F.A.T.U.L.O.: You need to push the right keys to dodge bullets, dodge the lasers and then dodge the other UFOs.

The more your enemies fall, the higher your score. When they collide with each other, the game ends and you get a new set of enemies and/or targets. You can buy 3 different kinds of missiles and you can upgrade them to make them more powerful. Each enemy has their own bonuses: Laser emitters, aerodynamic properties, and so on. Try to figure out which ones are the best and which ones you need to avoid. The game is free to play and no data or ads are stored on the user's device. We do not show ads, nor ask the user for any permissions or information. To compare devices for battery life, brightness and performance, press the "HOME" button to open the system settings. If you hold the VOLUME DOWN button, you can turn the screen off. See the help section for more information on how to control the game and how to get the game to work on your device. Show More... What's New New in version 1.0.2: - Added the ability to restart the game from a certain checkpoint.

What's new:

(3.8.4) an in-progress, high-level object-oriented C++/CLI wrapper around the Leadwerks Game Engine, which is designed to provide a dynamic C++ API that concentrates on product features useful within game development, and in particular aims to avoid recomplexed and thus difficult to use Game Engine features. Leadwerks is a development platform based on the combination of Microsoft DirectX,.NET, XNA and OpenFL. Leadwerks includes a number of advanced graphics and graphics scripting features, as well as a robust class library. It is more than just a wrapper. Leadwerks is an integrated IDE and runtime. Whilst C++ is a well established and more powerful, capable, and elegant language than C, the current Leadwerks API is very C like, and Leaner. Things which fit naturally in C++, such as 2D geometry handling, are generally packaged as stand-alone objects. In order to make C++ and the Leadwerks API more effective, aspects of the Leadwerks Engine which do not map to what you are used to in C++ are grouped into different libraries. In addition, C++ classes are organized in a coherent manner, allowing lead-in and lead-out of statements and scopes. Another paradigm that games and C++ developers are more used to, and find well suited to the current version of Leadwerks API, is Inheritance, Polymorphism, and Constraints. Leadwerks does not, by default, provide these "procedural" templates from C++. The Leadwerks API and its design philosophy is aimed at gamers and thus it does not require C++ to be an expert, and can be used with an existing knowledge of C++. This means it will be as easy and accessible to new C++ developers, as it is to experienced, or more used to, the C, C# or JavaScript environments. Compare this to the OpenFL API which is also aimed at gamers and mainly focuses on cross platforming (either 1st, 2nd or 3rd party API). The Leadwerks API also allows you use the power of C++ to do things like port code libraries from DirectX and XNA. As the Leadwerks API is mainly procedural, if we had decided to start simply baking procedural features into the C++ side, the API would have been much larger and much less useful to those
