You play as an offworlder named Scott, whose spaceship broke down on an uninhabited planet of the 3089 system. You have been drifting, unable to communicate with the rest of your ship, and you have run out of food. After falling into a cave nearby, you see a small missile and, after a bit of investigating, you discover a large rocket and realize that you need to get back to your ship. You travel back down to the surface and your ship... and it doesn't respond to your orders. You decide to explore the planet and see if you can find some help. You notice something strange. A lot of these creatures look familiar, even though they seem very different. One other ship has materialized near your ship. With the help of these creatures, you gradually recover your power, upgrade your ship, and explore the surrounding system. You must also survive attack from the constant threat of other humans and robots. About 3089 – The Story: You play as an offworlder named Scott, who's trying to get back to his ship. It broke down on an uninhabited planet of the 3089 system, and it has been drifting ever since. Without any communication back on the ship, he has been stranded. He notices a lot of creatures on the planet, and he begins to explore. One day, he comes across a small missile and begins to look around the area. After a bit of investigating, he finds out that it's a rocket and that you need to get back to your ship. It's an RPG with tons of stats that will also be customized before the game starts (with stats mainly being the main means of customization), with 18 weapons, 8 skill points, and 6 talent points to work with. Dev BlogThe crafting system is currently over 80% done, with several aspects of crafting being worked on. I would like to talk about the system in a more in-depth manner, but there are a few things that I need to fully explain before then. So for now, I'll just say that crafting will make plenty of aspects of the game both easier and harder. This is mostly thanks to the fact that, at a previous date, a system that went under the name "Gear Knocking" was implemented. Gear Knocking is the main way of making equipment in the game, but I have implemented a better system that will eventually eclipse Gear Knocking. The system revolves around mixing basic equipment together to make "Gear Components

Founded by respected German indie developer Klaus Cordes, Project Arrhythmia is a bullet-hell beat 'em up inspired by the likes of Double Dragon, Katamari Damacy and the like. It is a game that puts high importance on rhythm and timing which holds the player's attention all the way through the game. Our target audience will be fans of old school arcade style games and it is our intention to appeal to this audience, so we plan to launch with a core set of features that will be adapted and improved as the game is played and our community grows. The story will be centered around Anna Schroeder, the lead character of the game. She is an independent and rather rebellious programmer who decides to organize a safe meeting place for her socially awkward friends. Along the way she stumbles into a community that puts a twist on her life for good. During this adventure she stumbles upon a Project, an experiment by a mysterious man named Clemens Weiss, that is currently using Anna as its surrogate subject. The game features a level editor that will allow our users to create their own levels. Click to expand... Project Arrhythmia will be the first game that the team at Fraps will be developing for. Until now they have solely been developer of Fraps Studios, a live-action video broadcast game streaming service. "I am a mature man. I am responsible. I am professional. I am a hero. Episode 3: Transcendence It seems that the battle with the Shadow Master has turned his fate into a transcendent one - as he has now been transported to another dimension. But in that dimension, there is something more terrifying than anything our Werewolf has seen before: A hideous monster that feeds on the souls of the living. It is here that our Werewolf will meet his fate and will learn what it means to be human and free his soul from this other dimension... Episode 4: Imperception Another world, but this time he has been transported to yet another dimension: on another planet, our Werewolf has been attacked by yet another creature, who steals souls to feed its evil master. And so he has set forth on his last journey - but his soul has already begun to

What's new:

18 June 1798 The British faced a renewed onslaught in Ligny, Belgium during the early morning hours of June 18, 1798. British infantry and cavalry made a suicidal attack against French musketeers, cannon and artillery. Three British battalions and two squadrons were destroyed in the attack. The survivors retreated back to their infantry artillery, which was also destroyed. The second day of the battle saw regiments restore their lost order. Not only did the British-French infantry engage, but also British artillery and cavalry commanded by Archibald Campbell, Earl of Argyll. Campbell's force, composed of four squadrons, on June 19 ran headlong into a French "Impetuous" (Vive En Armee) cavalry regiment which was supported by a cannon. The British witnessed the destruction of 700 or 1,000 men, while only losing 2 men. This defeat was not enough to cause disaster on the battlefield; but it made the British increasingly unsure of the overall situation, and boosted popular support for Napoleon Bonaparte, who was consolidating his power in the region. Battle is the result of both command and communication failures. Even when an enemy does not seem to pose a threat, troops may need to exert themselves beyond what is reasonable for their numbers. The French-British army were incapable of exploiting their victory at Ligny. Introduction On June 3, 1798, in the battlefield of Ligny, the French generated a masterpiece in the art of battle. French defenses were constructed with such regularity and precision it seemed as if the entire French army was made of clockwork, unlike the British army, which had been ruffled by the "Battle of the 31st of March" (La Grande Charge des Trois Emperours, March 31, 1796) and thus had no appetite for battle. The bombardment of General Canrobert's batteries that day was the most destructive bombardment in the war. True, the gunners did not manage to take any of the six 300-gun Carronades (mortars) into the fight, but six-pounders disabled the four 155-gun twenty-four-pounders, and forced a British attack. To the French, who set out to fight in a certain way, a success in battle meant a series of operations that would bring France victory. For the British, a French victory in a battle meant only one thing: an attack at a time when
