GIS Autocad supports vector and raster graphics layers, and can read and edit GeoJSON data, GeoTIFF image data, KML vector data, and topo maps. There is an extension for GIS (GIS for AutoCAD) available on the Autodesk Exchange Apps. GIS for AutoCAD has over 30 map and satellite layers to choose from, including aerial photography, satellite imagery, ortho imagery, nautical charts, navigational charts, and landcover information. "In the past, it was often the case that CAD files had to be converted into other formats before being shared with GIS users. Now CAD files can be opened in GIS and, if appropriate, converted into a format suitable for the GIS user. In addition to being shared with GIS users, CAD files can be opened by GIS tools, and they can be spatially joined to map or satellite images". B cells (unlike T cells) do not contain an intracellular store of Ca2+, so that if plasma membrane Ca2+ channels are present, they must be activated by some unique stimulus such as the binding of a ligand to a receptor. The predominant plasma membrane Ca2+ channel in resting B cells is the inositol trisphosphate (IP3) receptor, with other types of Ca2+ channels being non-essential for their activation. The specific aims of the proposal are to determine whether a small conductance Ca2+ channel (R-type Ca2+ channel) or an IP3 receptor are activated in these cells by the engagement of their surface antigen by its ligand antibody; the identity of the antigen receptor and its structure will be determined; and the molecular mechanisms of channel activation will be investigated. These will include an examination of whether a membrane-associated guanine nucleotide binding protein (G-protein) or a phosphatase is involved in channel activation; and whether a plasma membrane protein tyrosine kinase (pp56) activates the channel. These studies will lead to a better understanding of the molecular mechanisms of the plasma membrane channels in B cells and will ca3bfb1094
