IE History Tracker Verdict: Overall, IE History Tracker was a very simple, plain and straightforward tool to view and manage the Internet Explorer's Internet history. Most of the listed features were easy to use and were adequate, all being targeted towards the user with basic Windows knowledge. Comments Advantages Disadvantages Probably the best I can find Charnita and I actually decided to try and look at our Internet history recently. I've never really kept track of it before and never looked into how to make sense of it or do anything with it. We looked through our history a bit but as it was quite a lot we decided we needed some kind of software to help us. I think that the only software that would do it properly would be made by Microsoft. I searched the Internet and found a few reviews of software available that looked at what you would be looking at on Internet Explorer. I came across this little program and thought I would give it a go. This program is a product from Bluecoat Systems, it's basically part of their Protect program. I've heard good things about this software before but I was still sceptical of it. The website makes a big impression, the graphics are really eye catching and the dark background with the huge glowing URLs is perfect. The program isn't huge and you can tell they were really trying to make it work as a small, discrete and simple program to use. Once installed the program is immediately usable straight away. It really is very easy to set up and once done you are straight away presented with what you need. The main window that you are presented with is a very traditional type 'top down' view of your history. You are presented with a display screen showing you all your URLs, to the left of each URL you have information about the date and time the URL was opened, the first place you opened it from and the total number of times you have seen it. b7e8fdf5c8

Have you ever wondered how you could use a system that takes time to launch one application, load a page, and then go off to explore the Internet? Perhaps you are interested in the Internet Explorer history? Or perhaps you're a university student? or a person who just can't be bothered looking through the list of opened URLs in Internet Explorer's main menu? Well, luckily for you, today we have a utility that allows you to record everything you do in Internet Explorer. Install IE History Tracker, and launch it for the first time. You will see a simple interface with a single button: Open Internet Explorer. Right-click the button and select Open IE, which will bring the Internet Explorer menu back into view. You can now select Open a URL. If Internet Explorer is already running and the selected site has been opened in the last two days, IE History Tracker will be opened automatically, and a note will appear in its icon. On the right-hand side of the interface there is a list of recently visited websites in IE History Tracker. Just select a site from the list and the page will appear in Internet Explorer. NOTE: Internet Explorer has to be open in order to view a webpage. But what if Internet Explorer is not the application you're using? Can't you record the page that you wanted to see? Of course you can. In addition to the sites IE History Tracker displays, IE History Tracker also tracks most other browsers, including Firefox, Opera, Chrome and Explorer. The program will also record all URLs and open system apps, including those installed through Windows Store. This gives you a chance to see every place where the application was installed. It's an ideal companion for Windows 10, since it can be started any time the user wants to move to another tab. Windows users can launch IE History Tracker by clicking Start, searching for the application and clicking the result displayed.
