In the present study the ability of trophoblast cells in vitro to hydrolyze glycogen and triglycerides and the extent of this hydrolysis were investigated during the first 2 days of rat pregnancy. Trophoblast cells in culture were found to be able to hydrolyze both glycogen and triglycerides as indicated by the uptake of PAS-positive reaction product into the trophoblast cells. Using animals with a short pregnancy time (24-26 hr), in vitro hydrolysis of glycogen was found to be more pronounced than in case of animals with a long pregnancy time (2-3 days). This difference between the short-time and long-time pregnant animals was even more pronounced when the trophoblast cells in uterus were investigated. In addition, in situ glycogen and triglyceride hydrolysis during early pregnancy was demonstrated by the use of histochemical techniques. In early pregnancy, glycogen and triglycerides were found to be hydrolyzed in the uterine epithelial cells of the allantoic part of the uterus, while glycogen was hydrolyzed in the endometrial epithelial cells of the uterine lumen of the same animals. The hydrolysis of glycogen was also found in trophoblast cells of the chorionic g. laminae and between trophoblast cells of the uterine smooth muscle layers.

He was born at Clermont-Ferrand and began his career as a clerk in a solicitor's office. In 1887 he moved to Paris where he found employment as a proofreader for the literary journal La Revue indépendante. His first novel Monnaie utopique was well received and he spent the winter of 1890–91 in Évreux writing his second novel, Le Clézio. During this period he attended seminars in his subject, but was unable to find a publisher for his work. He returned to Paris in 1892
