“Through research, we were able to capture the different movements of a player, including the turn of the head, and combine it with the data we collect and use in a similar way to unlocking game features,” said Stefan Horwath, Head of Creative Development at EA SPORTS. “As a result, the most natural and authentic movements of a player are now coming to life on the pitch.” Fifa 22 Activation Code sees new gameplay innovations to deliver more variety and unpredictability. New commands are mapped to the game controller in FIFA Ultimate Team, and allow players to use FIFA’s brand-new Access formational system to create different attacking formations. Access was developed alongside a new Visual Identity and is the foundation of the game’s brand new control scheme. Introduced from a first-person view, new Access Commands allow players to instantly alter the formation of the team according to their needs. For example, Access Commands can be used to quickly switch between several formations, or switch the emphasis of the entire team, as well as positioning the goalkeeper, to dominate the pitch. “We wanted to reimagine how to control the game from a first-person perspective, and we really wanted to create a new narrative,” said Giorgio Venerandi, Creative Director at EA SPORTS. “Access allows us to open up a new world of game mechanics, as well as give us the opportunity to move away from the traditional FIFA gameplay experience.” The new and improved X-Factor system is also being upgraded in FIFA 22. The Assist function, introduced in FIFA 17, has now been developed in-house. It enables you to call on your favourite player to seamlessly replace you in the play, offering the highest level of reliability and consistency in an ever changing world of football. “Through our global approach, we are able to make meaningful improvements to the systems that are core to FIFA,” said Aaron McFarland, Executive Producer at EA SPORTS. “We have seen a willingness among the players on our FIFA community to test new ideas in FIFA, and we are excited to be able to realise some of these through Game Changers as they make their debut in the new FIFA title.” FIFA 22 is a franchise milestone, as it marks the 20th anniversary of EA SPORTS FIFA and the 40th anniversary of the globally-bestselling video game franchise. It will launch in North America, Latin America
