Oracle Database XE is an embedded database; it does not require any third-party configuration or libraries for a database service. Therefore, you do not need to configure the database as a service, or start the database server. Oracle XE is an enhanced version of Oracle Database 10g. XE has been developed to include Oracle RAC as well as use of much of the System Global Area (SGA). XE includes Oracle RAC Updatable Shared Components and database features like Real Application Clusters (RAC), Flashback/Flashback Long, High Availability (HA), and other areas that are not part of the standard Oracle Database. In addition, Oracle Database XE is a completely new technology that takes advantage of virtualization to dramatically speed up database development time. By using virtualization, you can speed up the development of your database application by 150% or more. XE automatically uses the most appropriate hardware and software for maximum database performance. copy the oraclehome from the untarred oraclehome folder into the selected location in the virtualbox's "user" folder (for example c:\users\username\virtualbox). this is the path to the oracle home folder. the localservice account is a special account that is used by the windows operating system to interact with the oracle home. it has the same privileges as the administrator of the windows operating system. if you specify an existing user as the oracle home user, then the windows user account you specify can either be a windows domain user or a windows local user. the oracle home user and the windows account you specify must be in the same windows user group. an exception to this rule is that a localservice account and a localsystem account are equivalent. the localservice account is used by the windows operating system to interact with the oracle home. the localsystem account is used by the windows operating system to interact with the oracle home.
