When you select a folder to open, Lightroom has a few new search options to help you find anything in that folder. You can search by date using all or specific dates. You can search by keywords, and by file type. If you have ever run a search in Photoshop simply to see a quick preview of the thumbnails, you can now do that in Lightroom. There are also search features to find images within your collection and also within any folder on your hard drive. You can use the new and improved search options to quickly find your best shots or those with a certain “look”, as it were. It's much easier than running a search in Photoshop, because you don't have to worry about matching everything, just matching a set of criteria that you have chosen, which will only ever be partially related. For example, you could match only all images of one photographer, or by keywords representing a specific vacation or time period. You could also search for all photos taken when it was sunny, like a group of people in a wedding. The new Photoshop features have their own tab on the left side of the application, which is named “New Features.” The New Year's Icons are downloaded when you first start working in Lightroom 5. These are the same icons that you've been familiar with since CS3 because Adobe borrowed them from Apple . While the classic Mac clean desktop is gone, you'll now have the same icons available to you as other icons in both the iPhoto and Aperture ways of viewing images. Colour adjustments are now more powerful in Lightroom. You'll find new options for adjusting skins, curves, and levels, especially if you are a Lightroom 4 user. There are now 16 new adjustments available in Lightroom 5 compared to only 12 in Lightroom 4. The grey skies have been removed. Lightroom should be about 20% more robust when it comes to colour editing. Lightroom is also still pretty darn good at Exposure, Sharpening, and white balance.

The other thing that really matters with the RAM is the size of your hard drive. Photoshop requires a fairly large amount of files in your hard drive to work, as checking out the hundreds of layers and hundreds of adjustments it creates will add quite a lot of files to your computer. When taking into consideration about the size of the hard drive you can plug into your computer, the amount of RAM available on your computer, and the available amount of hard drive space on your computer, you'll need to allocate just the right amount of space for Photoshop. If you have a 1TB hard drive, your best bet with an old computer is 8GB of RAM with all your files on one large partition. If you have a much larger hard drive such as a 1,000GB hard drive, then you may need to assign a smaller amount of space to Photoshop. If you choose to move your files off your existing hard drive and put them onto a different drive, you can assign this other hard drive a secondary drive letter. You can then decide which hard drive Photoshop is loaded on. For example, you can chose to load Photoshop onto a 500GB drive with 500 GB of available space to house the files. Be sure to name the new partition properly, otherwise this will cause potential issues when loading your files back into Photoshop. If you are using the Ctrl+H shortcut to select the file you want to open, you'll need to find out which folder your file is in so you can select the file in a different location. If you need to look at a specific page of a web site, you can use the "Web" tab and choose to "Open file" in the browser. In the browser, you can then browse around to the area you want to open, and you can zoom in and out at any time. If you are creating images on a Mac, you can use the "Print" tab where you can choose to print the page. The "Web" tab allows you to save the web page for future reference or to print. However, if you want to save the web page as a PDF, you will need to use the "File" tab to do so. When printing from Photoshop, you can choose to print just the current page, a selection of pages, or the entire website. 933d7f57e6
