The images, published online Wednesday by the Fars News agency, show what appear to be portable surface-to-air missile-armed drones and, in one case, a wheeled vehicle-mounted system known as a Kornet missile. The unmanned craft can use "man-portable air defense systems" to intercept cruise missiles. They are being produced in factories in Ragga, a city in eastern Syria controlled by the group, said the report, citing "a source within one of the production factories." The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said that there were no confirmed production facilities of the drones in the militant-held portion of the country. Islamic State, also known as ISIS and ISIL, controls much of eastern Syria and northern and eastern Iraq. The US-led coalition on Monday struck sites used by Islamic State to manufacture the weapons and launch attacks on Shi'ite militias and groups supporting Bashar al-Assad in Syria. A senior Kurdish militant told Reuters last month that Islamic State had adapted an Israeli arms system known as the Spike anti-tank missile and bought an Iranian version of the Kornet missile. "The fighter jets should take cover from Iranian and Syrian missile because they (will) be used for attacks," said the militant, who spoke to Reuters on condition of anonymity.US Examines Training Camp Of Cpl.
