The poll conducted by Merriman Polling found that two-thirds of Americans believe there should be legal access to marijuana for medical purposes. Seventy-two percent said they would support a proposal to legalize medical marijuana, with those ages 65 and older being the most in favor of legalization, according to the National Journal. Americans still say by a slim margin that medical marijuana should be legal in the U.S. The poll found that 49 percent of adults in the country support medical marijuana, while 47 percent oppose it. Sixty-three percent of Democrats said they favored medical marijuana, and 53 percent of Republicans said they did. The survey noted that support for medical marijuana is particularly strong among women, whites, and those in the Midwest and South. Other findings from the poll included that seven in 10 Americans have not tried marijuana, and that seven in 10 think doctors should be able to decide if someone is allowed to use medical marijuana. The Merriman Polling survey also found that 83 percent of respondents who have smoked pot say it was an enjoyable experience. And 73 percent of Americans said they have had a friend or family member smoke
